THE WORK. THE RECORD. THE CONTEXT.

A sourced profile of Shorty BX, with a clear route to the music.

This half of MKA focuses on Shorty BX's published catalog, recent release listings and upcoming work identified in his supplied 2026 press kit. It does not claim a newly conducted interview.

Inside: the artist profile on pages 3–4; released and upcoming music on page 5; reporting and editorial notes on page 6. In the flip-format proof, turn the issue over to begin the R&B side with Lucky Spearman.

Promotional artist features published by MKA. Profiles draw on public release listings, official artist materials and team-supplied updates. No new artist interviews were conducted.

Facts are checked to a November 23, 2026 reporting cutoff. Source markers refer to the reference page for each artist. Music is linked to official destinations; no recordings or lyrics have been reproduced.

The covers use AI-assisted editorial composites based on the supplied artist imagery. The Today's Price and Body artworks inside the features remain as supplied or retrieved from the official release page.

Two artists. Two genres. One MKA edition.

SHORTY BX: A BRONX CATALOG, A NEXT CHAPTER

From Now or Never to Summer Elements, a release-led look at the independent artist—and the music still ahead.

A catalog can tell an artist’s story without a borrowed superlative. For Shorty BX, the starting point is a sequence of releases, collaborators and projects that gives new listeners somewhere concrete to begin. His supplied 2026 press kit identifies him as Derrick “Shorty BX” Wright, a South Bronx independent hip-hop artist and songwriter working with High Rank Powerful Muzik. [S1]

The release history provides a timeline: Better Late Then Never in 2019, No More Favors in 2021 and Now or Never in 2024. For someone discovering him through a recent single, those projects offer a way to move backward through the catalog rather than encountering the artist through one isolated track. The story has earlier chapters available to explore. [S2]

His 2026 releases bring collaboration into focus. Summer Elements credits GES RICH and Mz Vocalz as featured artists on its Apple Music listing, which dates the single August 14, 2026. An earlier promotional announcement advertised July 24. The streaming listing is the release date used here; the difference is recorded in the source notes. [S3, S4]

The featured names make Summer Elements part of a collaborative chapter. Following those connections is one way to explore an independent catalog: start with a recent release, notice who appears beside the lead artist and then return to the earlier projects. The listening desk in this issue supplies that route without assigning a score or making a claim about popularity.

Follow the catalog. Hear the next chapter for yourself.

TODAY’S PRICE: THE WORK AHEAD

New artwork. A recording awaiting its public release date.

Promotional artwork supplied for publication. Pre-save/pre-add screenshot supplied November 24, 2026; release date not confirmed. [S6]

Other 2026 catalog entries include Catch Feelings featuring Markie 3 and I Deserve You (Remix) featuring DeWes. His official website also presents music, videos and SBXAPPAREL, placing the recording work alongside a wider artist identity. These are useful points of entry for a feature grounded in the work rather than an invented breakthrough narrative. [S2, S5]

The next project requires a different label. The supplied press kit says the recording of Today’s Price is completed and that MP3 and WAV masters are available, while its public release date and streaming link remain to be confirmed. At the November 23 reporting cutoff, MKA therefore treats it as upcoming work—not a single already available to stream. [S1]

That leaves a meaningful present-tense story: an independent Bronx artist with an existing catalog, a run of collaborative releases and another recording in preparation. The strongest next step for readers is to hear the released music and follow the official channels for a confirmed announcement. The strongest next step for this feature is a direct conversation about the choices behind it.

This half of MKA follows Lucky Spearman’s 2026 releases and publicly documented media activity, with current campaign details attributed to his team. It is a profile, not a newly conducted interview or an album review.

Inside: the artist feature on pages 9–10; music and media links on page 11; sources and release-status notes on page 12. The digital edition reads upright; the flip-format proof begins this half from the reverse cover.

Promotional artist features published by MKA. Profiles draw on public release listings, official artist materials and team-supplied updates. No new artist interviews were conducted.

His team’s nomination, host-role and follower updates are identified as team-supplied. A nomination is not an award win; a proposed media visit is not a confirmed booking. This issue does not promote unconfirmed interview appointments.

Portrait supplied for publication on November 24, 2026. Body artwork retrieved from the official pre-save destination and matched to the supplied screenshot. Final photographer and artwork credits should be confirmed for the publication edition. The cover is an AI-assisted composite; the original supplied portrait is retained in the editable materials.

The music comes first. The context makes the story clearer.

LUCKY SPEARMAN: CHICAGO R&B, THE NEXT CHAPTER

With Love On You available and Body scheduled next, the singer’s 2026 release story moves toward another turning point.

Lucky Spearman’s current release story has a clear sequence. That’s When arrived on June 4, 2026. Love On You followed on September 17. Both are listed by Apple Music as R&B/Soul releases under KARDS Ent., giving listeners a documented starting point for the Chicago artist’s latest work. [L1, L2]

At the November 23 reporting cutoff, Body is the next announced release. Apple Music labels it a pre-release for November 26, 2026, while the artist’s HyperFollow page offers a Spotify pre-save. That makes “scheduled” the accurate word here. Its presence in a store listing does not make it an already-released single. [L3, L4]

His official press kit describes a background spanning singing, DJ work and KARDS Entertainment. It places his upbringing on Chicago’s South Side and presents storytelling as part of his artistic identity. Those details are attributed to the artist’s materials; this feature does not borrow their promotional descriptions as an independent assessment of the music. [L5]

There is also a public record of the media work around the releases. Urban Grind TV’s September 24 announcement introduced him as a Chicago R&B artist, DJ and entrepreneur and promoted a September 30 interview, performance and radio appearance. Separately, DJ Ben Hop’s Best Kept Secret lists a Lucky Spearman guest episode dated August 10, with a July 24 recording date. [L6, L7]

Love On You is available. Body is scheduled next.

BODY: THE NEXT RELEASE

Scheduled for Thanksgiving Day, November 26, 2026.

Body — official single artwork, matching the supplied pre-save screenshot. Scheduled November 26, 2026; pre-save available. [L3, L4]

His team's November 23 update adds a more current campaign snapshot: an Urban Grind TV hosting role, a Chicago Music Awards nomination for Best Male R&B Vocalist and an 80,000-follower TikTok milestone. These are team-supplied updates, not independently audited metrics or an award win. They are identified that way in this draft. [L8]

Beyond the singles, the official website presents No Lucks Given as an EP marked "Coming Soon." No confirmed release date appears on the page reviewed for this feature. The magazine therefore keeps the project on the horizon rather than assigning it a date or describing it as available. [L9]

Taken together, the record supports a story about an artist working across releases and media. For readers, the invitation is specific: begin with the current singles, follow the Body pre-release page and watch the official site for the EP announcement. For MKA, the editorial responsibility is equally specific: preserve the difference between released music, scheduled work and team-reported milestones.
